encampments. The inset of San Francisco shows streets, parks, wharfs, rail lines and other early features.

The state survey of California is nearly complete. Orange, Imperial and Riverside Counties are still not present. The primary map of California is one of the most detailed of the period and includes early topographical details.

While Gray's atlas began appearing in 1873, this unique set of insets only began appearing in the mid 1880s, at the very tail end of Gray's publication of his National Atlas, and are therefore quite scarce on the market.
