Description:

This antique map of the eastern part of the Roman Empire, published by Henri Chatelain at the beginning of the 18th century, provides a fascinating look at the region during a significant period in its history. The map covers a large area, extending from Greece in the west to India in the east, and it includes the Persian Gulf, the Caspian Sea, and the Black Sea.

The map includes a detailed history of the region from the first Roman Emperors up to Theodosius the Great in 395 AD. It is beautifully illustrated and hand-colored, with a detailed depiction of the various provinces and their boundaries. Major cities, rivers, and other important features are also labeled, providing a rich and comprehensive view of the Eastern Roman Empire.

Overall, the map is an excellent example of 18th-century cartographic techniques, and it offers a valuable glimpse into the history of the eastern Roman Empire. It is a valuable piece for any collector of antique maps or anyone interested in the history of the region.
