Description:

Map of Turkey, Greece, the Holy Land and the Eastern Mediterranean, illustrating the eastern portion of the Roman Empire.

The map depicts the Roman Empire based upon the writings of Eusebius, Socrates, and Euagrius.

One of the key figures in the early history of the Roman Empire was Eusebius, a historian and bishop who lived in the 4th century CE. Eusebius is best known for his historical works, including a chronicle of the Roman Empire and a history of the Church. In these works, Eusebius wrote about the early Christian Church and its relationship with the Roman Empire, as well as the lives of various emperors and other important figures.

Euagrius was a historian who lived in the 5th century CE and is known for his work "Ecclesiastical History," which covers the period from the 4th to the 6th century CE. Euagrius wrote about the spread of Christianity, the conflicts between various factions within the Church, and the lives of various bishops and other religious figures.
