Description:

Interesting and detailed map of New Hampshire, from the first edition of Bradford's Illustrated Atlas.

The map is colored by counties and shows towns, rivers, lakes, and other important places.

In the 1830s, New Hampshire was a largely rural state with a growing population. The economy was based primarily on agriculture and manufacturing, with many small farms and textile mills scattered throughout the state. The state's transportation infrastructure was limited, with most goods being transported by horse-drawn wagons or boats on the state's many rivers.
