Description:

"Poland," a map produced by John Seller in 1679, accurately represents the region of Poland during a notable period of its history. As part of the Atlas Minimus, this map serves as a testament to the geographical understanding and cartographic standards of the late 17th century.

The map delineates Poland, a nation with a complex geographic and cultural landscape. During this time, the Polish-Lithuanian Commonwealth, a major political entity in central and eastern Europe, was in operation.

The map indicates significant geographical markers and political boundaries. It reflects the administrative divisions of the era, providing insight into the geopolitical landscape of 17th-century Poland.

Accompanying the map, an engraved table titled "These VI Countries are Subject to the Crown of Poland" lists the primary divisions within the Polish realm, including "The great Dukedom of Lithuania," "The Ukrain or Country of the Cosaques," "The Duchy of Prussia," "The Duchy of Courland," and "Samogitia."

John Seller's "Poland" map provides a comprehensive geographical representation of the region during the late 17th century. The accompanying table of countries under the Polish Crown further contextualises the map, offering insights into the political structure of the region during this period.
