Description:

Rare 18th Century map of the lower part of the Duchy of Silesia, published in Paris by Jean de Beaurain, Geographer to King of France and teacher of the Dauphin.

The map depicts the different duchies, principalities, and baronies that made up the region. Each of the duchies referenced on the map is significant in its own right, and their identification is essential to understanding the historical context of the map.

The first duchy referenced on the map is Schweidnitz, which was a significant duchy in the region. Schweidnitz was located in the southern part of Silesia and was known for its impressive fortifications, including a large castle that served as a residence for the dukes of Schweidnitz.

The second duchy mentioned is Jauer, which was located in the southwestern part of Silesia, near the border with Bohemia. Jauer was known for its beautiful castle, which was built in the Gothic style and served as a residence for the dukes of Jauer.

The third duchy is Glogau, which was situated in the western part of Silesia. Glogau was known for its beautiful architecture, including a magnificent castle that was the residence of the dukes of Glogau.
