Description:

In "China - A Friendship Map," Louise E. Jefferson, a noted African American cartographer, presents a visual chronicle of China as it stood on the cusp of significant political change in 1948. Published by Friendship Press, the publishing arm of the National Council of Churches, this pictorial map weaves together portraits of influential Chinese figures and annotations about Chinese culture and history, offering a nuanced perspective of the country on the brink of Mao Zedong's revolution.

The historical milieu of the late 1940s China was marked by socio-political turbulence, transitioning from the centuries-old dynastic rule towards a new political order. Jefferson's map serves as an intriguing document of this momentous period, profiling key figures such as Dr. Sun Yat-Sen, the leader of the revolution that ended the monarchy, and Dr. T. Z. Koo, an influential figure in the Christian Federation and the Y.M.C.A. in China.

Jefferson's map also acknowledges the significant contributions of individuals such as Y. C. Yen, a pioneer in literacy, public health, and citizenship, and Dr. Wu Yi-Fang, a prominent advocate for women's education. These featured portraits provide a more intimate lens into the Chinese societal fabric of the time, revealing a diverse cast of characters who helped shape the nation's modern identity.

The map is further enhanced by Jefferson's annotations on Chinese culture and history. From acknowledging China's invention of fireworks to recognizing the early missionaries' contributions to modern Chinese education, these insights add layers of depth and intrigue to the map.
