Description:

Detailed map, divided by parishes and townships. Shows towns, roads, mountains, rivers, railroads, lakes, etc. Morse & Breese's North American Atlas was one of the first American Atlases to employ the cerographic printing process, a process invented by the Morse's and the first truly American printing process. An essential map for American Map collectors, illustrating an important change in the history of printed maps and the only truly American cartographic publishing innovation. Minor waterstain on right margin, just entering image, but overall a nice example.
